s 22(1)(a)(ii)
Dear

I hope you had a lovely weekend. A quick heads-up FYI on the correspondence that RSPCA has emailed to the Treasurer today from our CEO, Richard Mussell (attached). This relates to our concerns around the government's decision to cease the ABS' provision of Australia's five-yearly Agricultural Census and Agricultural Commodities results, which I understand s _ flagged with you in your meeting earlier this month. You may recall that this matter was also flagged in our Pre-Budget Submission.

We welcome any questions and can pick-up in this matter in our next scheduled meeting.

Kind regards

Hon Dr Jim Chalmers MP
Treasurer

By email: jim.chalmers@treasury.gov.au

Dear Dr Chalmers

I write to request a meeting to discuss RSPCA Australia's concerns about the Australian Bureau of Statistics' (ABS) intention to cease its five-year Agricultural Census and Agricultural Commodities Survey results. In the absence of an independent statutory agency for animal welfare to oversee animal-use industries, the ABS' legislated independence<sup>1</sup> and responsibility to inform public policy and deliver relevant, trusted and objective data, statistics and insights on the use of animals in Australia is crucial.

The RSPCA is Australia's most trusted animal welfare charity. We have worked with regulators, governments, industry and the community for more than 150 years to improve animal welfare. We are an evidence-based organisation that advocates for improved animal welfare and policy change based on animal welfare science and robust data.

We are pleased that the Labor Government is demonstrating national leadership in animal welfare. In particular, its commitment to phase out live sheep export, proposed establishment of an Inspector General of Animal Welfare and intention to re-establish an Animal Welfare Strategy. Significant focus is required to improve animal welfare, and ensure that Australian standards reflect contemporary animal welfare science as well as domestic and international community expectations.

The government-commissioned report by Futureye (2018) highlights that Australians are concerned about animal welfare and see the Federal Government as responsible for protecting animals through effective public policy.<sup>2</sup> Moreover, 98% of Australians consider animal welfare important and 80% support more government action to improve animal welfare.<sup>3</sup> In our own Public Perception Report last year, 78% of respondents indicated that animal welfare is extremely or very important. We also note that this level of importance has increased since 2018.<sup>4</sup>

Animal welfare is an increasingly important factor for industry sustainability, and Australia's international trade and reputation. However, there is an unacceptable lack of independent, timely and objective data on Australia's animal use industries, including animal agriculture. To date, the ABS' animal production statistics have been the only source of independent data with the five-yearly census data in particular, providing important information on specific production systems, e.g. egg production, and specific practices, e.g. around lamb marking. The annual ABS statistics and the five-yearly census data, while limited, are critical to measuring some markers for animal welfare improvements over time.

Therefore, the recent decision to cease the collection and reporting of animal agricultural data is deeply flawed. We are concerned that the decision fails to reflect the government's intention to improve animal welfare, and the community's expectations that it will do so. It also exposes Australia's international reputation to further criticism and risks the long-term sustainability of animal agriculture. Specifically, the decision fails to reflect some of the requirements outlined in the ABS' Statement of Expectations.<sup>5</sup> That is, it undermines the requirements to:

1. effectively provide key statistics and use of data; and
2. engage with stakeholders.

While we understand part of the rationale behind the decision was the lack of industry engagement,<sup>6</sup> the RSPCA believes the government should be strongly encouraging, if not regulating, the requirement for animal use industries to provide data. Industry transparency and accountability is arguably more important today than ever, given the increasing concern and awareness of animal welfare. Animal-use industries' social licence depends on this.

The RSPCA advocates for increased independent data collection and reporting on animal use industries. There is significant need for greater transparency, timeliness and objectivity in the provision of animal use data in Australia given the primary sources of data are peak industry bodies and rural research and development corporations. Data collection and reporting must not be left to industries whose primary objectives are commercial because animal welfare will be subordinate and impossible to measure or improve overtime. (We note the meat and livestock industry's alleged overestimate of Australia's beef cattle herd.<sup>7</sup>)

We would appreciate the opportunity to meet to discuss this issue and how the RSPCA can be part of the solution. We invite your office to contact s 47F\(1\) our Senior Policy Officer, at s 47F\(1\) to arrange a meeting time at your earliest convenience.

Yours sincerely

Dear s 22(1)(a)(ii)

It was really nice to meet you on the Zoom call with the Minister today. Please pass on HSI's thanks to the Minister, I thought it was a great conversation. I thought I would follow up by sending through HSI's submission to the budget process which addresses some of the points made on the call. EX 20237 Page 8 of 14

I know the Minister has been dealing with a series of national disasters and so HSI hasn't pushed for a bilateral meeting. However, we would love to get something in the diary in the next little while if we can? Once he has had time to consider what was raised today, we would love to talk more about the opportunities for Commonwealth leadership on standards and guideline processes and to also dig a little more into the mulesing issue in particular.

Thanks
